Frankfort Mayor Receives Call For Waste Paper

George Sangmeister of Frankfort local co-ordinator, has received another appeal for waste paper in a bulletin from the Illinois State Council of Defense. It states: "If the same promotion which went into the scrap drive, was put behind the waste paper drive, the major problem of the paper consuming industries trade, that of supplying enough waste paper for the producers of packages, containers and war uses, might be quickly solved. An increase of the collection by 12 or 15 percent or about a million tons more a year, would satisfy the needs of the container industry. England is now salvaging between 65 and 70 percent of its waste paper, whereas the figures for this country are about 30 percent. As one phase of assistance, users of waste paper have agreed to extend their agreement to pay ceiling prices for all waste paper until February 15, 1944 so as to guarantee collectors of waste paper a stable market for everything they collect."

Members of the Victory Club are without space to store waste paper they collect. The use of an old shed would be greatly appreciated. Any one desiring to donate storage space may call the president of the club, Geo Sangmeister Jr. Frankfort.

NO OUTDOOR CHRISTMAS LIGHTS THIS YEAR

The American people have been asked by J. A. Krug Director of the Office of War Utilities, to confine Christmas lighting decorations to Christmas trees inside private homes.

Mr. Krug asked that street decorations, community Christmas trees, exterior home decorations and interiors and exteriors of commercial establishments dispense with decorations this year insofar as lighting is concerned.

"Government and industry have combined in a nationwide conservation campaign to save critical fuels and materials necessary to produce and consume electricity," he said.

"I am asking the American people to refrain from their Christmas lighting custom as a part of that campaign. Electric light bulbs are particularly short at present and strict conservation of them is necessary. Widespread consumption of bulbs during the Christmas season merely will mean a greater scarcity later on."

"Because of the shortness of daylight over most of the country at Christmas time, necessary consumption of electricity is at its peak. Everything we can do to avoid any additional load will mean direct savings of fuel, manpower, transportation and materials."

Mr. Krug said no mandatory order was contemplated because "the American people realize the necessity of this conservation and will do it."

PRESIDENT AND NEWSPRINT

Some of the President's newspaper friends who have been consistently for him over a long period of years are now suggesting that this is a good time to turn the other cheek regarding his constant feud with the press. They suggest that he personally could step into the current newsprint shortage and take a strong stand on an issue which seriously threatens one of the basic freedoms of the country—freedom of the press.

Actually, a good many bureaucrats have been nibbling at the newsprint problem, but no one has stepped in with any forthrightness to cut red tape and solve the problem. It now looks as if only the White House could do this.

Not generally realized is the fact that newsprint shortage is due not so much to decreased woodpulp production in the Canadian forests, but to much greater use of cardboard and packing material in sending war supplies abroad. This is a terrific drain and, though U. S. publishers have patriotically cut their newsprint, they will have to cut to the bone unless energetic moves are made by the government.

The plan put forward by newspaper executives friendly to the White House includes:

1. Greater use of war prisoners in the Canadian and Maine forests.
2. More equitable distribution of newsprint among publishers. At present, the papers with the big Sunday editions have scarcely suffered at all, being able to absorb their paper cuts out of their Sunday "fat." On the other hand, medium-sized papers may have to take terrific punishment.

3. Stricter supervision of cuts by throw-aways, dodgers, comic magazines and newsprint users who have not kept such accurate records of their past consumption. The newspaper industry has suffered by its past efficiency, having kept very accurate records.

4. More emphasis on the paper salvage campaign. At present, only 35 per cent of the nation's waste paper is being collected and salvaged. The waste paper reclaiming machinery is running at only 51 per cent of capacity. Approximately 6,000,000 tons of waste paper are normally collected and sold for paper board but now only two million.

The newspapers stepped in and did a great job of collecting scrap iron when the nation needed it, but now, when the newspapers need newsprint, they themselves are somewhat handicapped in blowing their horn.

What the White House will do remains to be seen.

GOOD NEIGHBOR PEACE

Ten years ago, there was a very serious war between Bolivia and Paraguay in the jungles of the Gran Chaco. Last week, the presidents of Paraguay and Bolivia met at the border of the two countries in the Chaco, erected a large cross, and pledged themselves and their countries to everlasting peace.

The bitterness which animated these two South American countries has been wiped away, and they are Good Neighbors in every sense of the word.

Some diplomats hope this incident is a forecast that the bitterness actuating the enemies of World War II may likewise be eliminated after the passage of time.

INSIDE STORY OF HORNET

The navy department has okayed publication of the inside story of the famous airplane carrier Hornet, written as a book, "A Ship to Remember," by Alexander Griffin of the Philadelphia Record.

For the first time it reveals the spectacular operation of the ship which carried General Doolittle's bombers within a stone's throw of Tokyo. Among other things, the navy okayed publication by Griffin of the fact that, at one time, the Hornet practically acted as a substitute for Henderson Field in the Solomons. That badly messed-up airport, on the night of October 14, 1942, had only five planes left and gasoline to send out only four. So the Hornet came alongside the island, threw her planes into action and, for 36 hours, substituted for Henderson Field.

Even more astonishing is the revelation that, at one time during the low point in the South Pacific battle, the U. S. navy had only one aircraft carrier left undamaged in that entire expanse of water—the Hornet.

CHRIST'S NEW COMMANDMENT

LESSON TEXT—Mark 12:28-34; John 13:34, 35; 15:10-14.

GOLDEN TEXT—A new commandment I give unto you, That ye love one another; as I have loved you, that ye also love one another.—John 13:34.

The "new commandment" of love which Christ gave was not new in the sense of then first being known, but new in its application (John 13:34). Only since Christ had come did men know how to love in truth.

This commandment of love was also first in time, being given before the Ten Commandments (see Lev. 19:18). Then, too, it declared the fundamental of all spiritual life, the first thing man needed to know, that God is love.

It also must take first place in man's thinking, for even as the Decalogue (Ten Commandments) is the heart of all moral law, so love for God and our fellow man is that which makes the Decalogue effective in our lives. Love and obedience go together (John 15:10).

Our lesson teaches us four things—

I. Love God (Mark 12:28-30).

Because "God is love" (I John 4:8) He desires man's perfect love toward Him. Because the essence of His being is love, He loves us, and enables us to love Him.

There is more here than a commandment or the performing of a duty. There is the recognition of a controlling principle of all life. In a day of multiplication of powerful machines and organizations, when man is "power conscious" in an unusual way, it is well to recall that the greatest power in all the world is the power of love.

Then let us not forget that all true love should rest upon fellowship with God. It has no real foundation if it does not.

II. Love Your Neighbor (Mark 12:31-34).

Everything about our relationship to Christ and to God expresses itself in our living. No spiritual truth is simply to be admired, or kept on a shelf as a cherished possession. It is to be put to work in the affairs of life.

Love for God means love for our neighbor. If we do not love our neighbor (and that means our fellow man—Luke 10:25-42) how then does the love of God abide in our hearts?

It is worthy of note that the recognition and appreciation of this truth on the part of the scribe brought him near to the kingdom of God, but not into it. He was "not far from," but he was not in it. It is terrifying to think how close men may come to entering without doing so. Reader, have you entered into eternal life through Jesus Christ?

III. Love Your Brethren (John 13:34, 35).

Here we come within the circle of believers and see that the distinctive thing about their fellowship should be love for one another.

The old commandment of love becomes a new one because Christ shows that the measure of that love is to be His great love for us. How did Christ love us? With a perfect, unselfish and thoughtful devotion, which so deeply desired the very most and best for us that He was willing to lay down His holy life as our Saviour from sin.

The thing which marked the early church with glorious distinction was that in a world that hated, they loved one another, and in a world that killed and destroyed, they were even willing to die for their brethren. Tertullian of Carthage (Tunis) said, in the second century, that the enemies of Christianity said of the Christians, "See how they love one another."

IV. Love is Obedient, Joyful and Sacrificial (John 15:10-14).

Love is not an impulsive, erratic movement of man's nature which tries to make up for neglect and unkindness by occasional displays of generosity and thoughtfulness. No indeed. Love walks the straight and steady way of obedience to God's commandments.

Keeping God's law is not accomplished by reading it, or talking about it, or even learning it by heart, but by definitely practicing its precepts.

This brings joy into our lives—the real and perfect joy of Christ. How little we appreciate what this means. Our fellowship with the Lord calls for obedience and sacrifice, but that is not a burdensome, dull, distressing experience. It is a joyful one. Who counts it a trial to do that which pleases a loved one? Do we really love God? Then we will rejoice in our response to His will, yes, in any possible act of devotion.

Love draws no limiting line beyond which it will not go. Love says: "I count not my life dear, if in giving it I may bring deliverance to my friends."

We shall not question His guidance nor blush to own His name, even though the testimony may mean our death. This we shall do for Christ's sake, and for the sake of a suffering humanity.

BLACK SOMBREIRO
by CLIFFORD KNIGHT

Elsa Chatfield, Hollywood artist, is disinherited by her Aunt Kitty, who died from an overdose of morphine. Hunt Rogers, professional sleuth, and Barry Madison, an amateur detective, go to Mazatlan, Mexico, to solve what they believe to be Kitty Chatfield's murder. On arrival, they find that Elsa's party had preceded them by plane. During a fiesta at the ranch of Sam Chatfield (Elsa's father), James Chesebro is murdered. Lombardo, chief of the Mexican police, questions Pedro, the pulque man, after questioning all the guests. They reenact the prologue to the death of Chesebro. While this is going on Pedro, the star witness, makes his escape into the mountains.

CHAPTER XI

"It's a nice little puzzle so far, Barry," observed Rogers. "We'll not solve it tonight—probably not tomorrow. It can very quickly be solved if Lombardo and his man Friday will catch up with Pedro. Suppose we sleep on it."

We did sleep on it, rocking gently in our stateroom on board the Orizaba anchored in the harbor. In the light of a new day, after a leisurely breakfast with Margaret and Dwight, at which time we spoke softly and with respect for the now murdered James Chesebro, we waited for the launch to take us ashore. Suddenly Dwight's body stiffened. "Look! Did you see that?" he cried. "Look!"

Before our eyes some hundreds of yards away a huge fish leaped clear of the water and then fell back with a great splash.

"There's your marlin, darling," said Margaret sweetly, "come to play with you."

"Let's go fishing now," Dwight's voice was excited. "Come on, fellows."

"Sorry," said Rogers. "I'd planned some other things—about Chesebro's slayer."

"Well, go on, then; the launch is waiting for you. As soon as it's back I'm going after that fellow. Hunting me up, is he? Wanting to play with me?" said Dwight as Rogers and I went down the ladder.

We landed at the wharf, found one of those ancient two-wheeled aranas like the one Elsa had ridden in that first day, climbed in and set off.

"It's probably like hunting for the needle in the haystack, Barry," he remarked, after an extended conversation with the driver which explored the fellow's acquaintances among the pulque sellers. At first the driver, a sleepy-eyed fellow with a bushy mustache, had not been able to comprehend why we should search for a pulque seller when liquor of many kinds was easily obtainable almost anywhere. When he realized, however, that we were looking for a particular dealer in pulque, he believed that he knew several Pedros. And so we started out.

We stopped at one thatched hut which our driver said was the home of Pedro, the pulque seller. But the man who answered Rogers' summons was fat and small, with a smile that was well nigh irresistible. Did we wish to buy pulque? He indicated a nearby contrivance which was just a frame on wheels with holes for the brown clay jars. No, we did not. We sought Pedro, the pulque seller, who was a thin man with small eyes. He knew such a man farther down the street, and counted the houses for us and bade us a courteous good morning. But the second Pedro was not our pulque man, either.

At last our dispirited horse pulled up with a sigh before a thatched hut near the end of the street.

A small shy woman came to the door when Rogers knocked.

"Does Pedro, the pulque seller, live here, senora?" Rogers inquired in Spanish.

"Yes, sir," the woman replied hesitantly, a frightened look in her deep, dark eyes.

"Is he Pedro, the pulque seller, who last evening went to deliver pulque at the rancho of Senor Chatfield?"

"Yes, sir."

"May we speak with Pedro, senora?" inquired Rogers, smiling. The woman shook her head vaguely. Finally she said: "He is not at home, sir."

"Where can I find him?"

"He is away, sir."

"When will he return?"

The woman shook her head and did not reply.

"He is away, sir," she repeated. We were getting nowhere. Rogers suddenly looked up at the little green parrot overhead, held up a forefinger invitingly against the green breast and the parrot promptly climbed on and was lowered to the level of our eyes.

"What is he called, senora?" Rogers asked.

"He is called Pepe, sir."

"He is not a young bird, senora, the yellow patch of feathers on his head is large. It is, like gray hair with us, a sign of age."

"Yes, sir; he is very old."

"Did your husband return home last night from his trip to the rancho of Senor Chatfield?"

"Briefly, sir; and then made haste to depart."

"Did he go far, senora?"

"To the mountains, sir," she replied, with a gesture that indicated the distant range.

"And he will return soon?"

The woman shook her head. "He is away, sir. I do not know when he will return."

A man was lurking inside the house as we talked, just beyond our view. I had heard him and so had Rogers. At last overcome by curiosity he appeared suddenly behind the woman in the doorway. It was not, however, Pedro as I suspected, but a man whose face was familiar. Rogers glanced at him.

"Good morning," he said and smiled. The man returned the greeting hesitantly.

"My brother, Jose," the woman said.

"And did the old dog die, senor?" inquired Rogers. I recognized then the individual who the morning of Elsa's attack on Chesebro was putting to death with chloroform an old dog near the stables.

"Oh, yes, sir. Quickly, as you said he would."

"Senor," began Rogers, "the chloroform—tell me again who gave it to you?"

"Senora Chatfield, sir."

"Senora Chatfield?"

"Yes. She of the golden hair—"

Rogers suddenly elevated Pepe to the thatch of the roof where with a flutter of wings and wildly clutching feet he re-established himself, wheeled about to stare down at us with his wicked little eyes and uttered a squawk of pleasure. We prepared to take our departure; Rogers bowed and smiled.

"I wish your husband a safe journey, senora, and a speedy return," he said, and we withdrew to our arana, tagged by the still silent children, while the pulque seller's wife stood in the doorway of the hut to observe our departure.

We had jogged along for some distance in the direction of the business district when I remarked, "Some grist for the mill there."

"Yes, Barry. There is confirmation of the conclusion we reached last night. Pedro ran out on us at Sam Chatfield's, hurried home, remained briefly and then fled to the mountains for an indefinite stay. He carried with him the belief that he not only saw the murderer of Chesebro, but can identify him. He fears the consequences if he is made to identify him."

"You're right, of course," I sighed. "But where does that leave us, Hunt?"

"It leaves us with a simple explanation of the crime—when Pedro is captured and returned to Mazatlan. To the jefe del policia, Senor Otilio Lombardo, will fall the honor of solving the murder of Kitty Chatfield, as well as that of Chesebro, when his men bring in Pedro."

"But there's no evidence that the two were done by the same hand."

"No," admitted Rogers, as we drove along the shady streets, "there is no evidence of it; there's only a hunch on my part, and a very, very faint hunch at that. Perhaps no more than a wish that it be so. Simplify things enormously, wouldn't it, Barry?" he said, looking at me with a twinkle in his mild blue eyes. "Let's go and talk with Lombardo and urge upon him our belief, and perhaps spur him on to greater effort in bringing back Pedro." He turned to the driver and said in Spanish: "Senor, take us, please, to the police station."

Rogers asked for Lombardo at a small desk, and the courteous occupant assured us that we should see the jefe at once. But it was some ten minutes before we were shown into a small room where Lombardo sat alone.

"We came," Rogers said slowly, "only to offer what help you think we can give toward the solution of the murder of our friend, James Chesebro."

"That is very kind of you, gentlemen."

"Our opinion, reached after considerable reflection, senor, is that it is vital to capture Pedro, the pulque seller, who fled last night when we were about to require him to identify the slayer."

"Yes, of course."

"Undoubtedly Pedro knows who the slayer is."

"I believe so, gentlemen."

"We understand that he fled last night to the mountains."

"Ah, so?" Lombardo's eyebrows shot upward. "You know that too?"

"Yes, from the man's wife. You of course, have questioned her?"

"Of a certainty, senor. Already the order has been given to bring the man back from the mountains."

"It would be helpful, gentlemen," he said carefully, "if you could provide us with additional motives to be put with those we already have when it comes to the trial."

"You—" he began hesitantly. "Is it possible you have reached a decision, senor?"

"We have made the arrest, this morning. The murderer is now in custody, gentlemen. I would appreciate it if you could supply, perhaps, additional motives, although what we have are ample, I am sure."

We both were silent, stunned a little at this announcement of an arrest in the case so early, before even Pedro had been returned to Mazatlan.

"May we ask, senor—" began Rogers.

"Of course," Lombardo replied, his white even teeth showing in a magnificent smile. "I have arrested Senor Reed Barton."

"Barton?" I exclaimed.

"Yes, Senor Madison. It was not difficult to discover the fact that he is guilty. There was the testimony of Pedro last night; not testimony in so many words, gentlemen, but by his actions. He was terrified of having to identify the murderer who was at the moment re-enacting the role before our eyes."

"But—" Rogers attempted to protest. Lombardo ignored the effort courteously.

"Moreover, senores, yesterday Senor Barton and Senor Chesebro quarreled violently in the office of the mining company. Senor Barton was discharged; there were threats exchanged. The quarrel was over Senorita Chatfield. All this has been told us by Senor Costillo, the clerk in the office, who was a witness."

Reed Barton was sitting in his cell smoking a cigarette with the air of one upon whom has descended a vast and philosophic calm. His dark blue eyes indicated that there had been no strain, no loss of sleep. His handclasp through the bars of his cell was vigorous and warm, and he looked at us with a faint expression of amusement at our concern for his predicament.

"I didn't dream, Reed," I said, "when we parted at Sam Chatfield's last night, that we would find you here this morning."

"Neither did I, Barry. Mexico not only is a land of romance, but, in the threadbare observation, anything can happen in it."

"And does, apparently," remarked Hulton Rogers, a wry twist to his lips. "I'm sorry that this has happened, Reed. It is much too soon to make an arrest."

We spoke in English, to which the guard lounging near by paid no attention.

"When were you arrested, Reed?" I inquired.

"At the very moment when I was sleeping my best, just before sunrise. They came knocking on my door, made me dress and brought me here."

"But they haven't anything in the way of evidence that a good attorney couldn't shoot holes through—at least, back home it would be so," I said.

Reed cocked his head and looked at me. "This is different, Barry," he remarked. "I don't know what they've got. Except for one thing—the police picked up a paper knife in my room while I was dressing. It seemed to have its effect."

"Yes, it was a small, thin-bladed weapon that killed Chesebro. But there's more than that, of course," Rogers explained. "Lombardo seems to have been swayed a great deal by what a clerk in your office told about you and Chesebro quarreling."

"Costillo?" said Reed. "He would, of course. We did have quite a go—the Chief and I. I guess I told you about it, Barry. We unloaded everything we had been storing up for each other for several months. Chiefly concerning Elsa, you know; but, even if I do say it, he rather started talking about Elsa. Down here, of course, things like that amount to fighting words."

Steps along the corridor interrupted our conversation; the guard sat more erect in his chair and shot a glance at us as if he meditated bringing our conference to a halt. Walking rapidly around the corner came the short, rather thick figure of Sam Chatfield. He saw us standing outside Reed Barton's cell and came directly toward us, a smile lighting his rather serious face.

The Nativity

By

H. I. Phillips

AT THAT time: There went forth a decree from the Caesars that the whole world should be enrolled, catalogued and hewn to a pattern; that there should be a census of resources and arms and philosophies. And all went to be enrolled, every one unto his own city; and Joseph also went up from Galilee out of the city of Nazareth into Judea, which is called Bethlehem, because he was of the house and family of David, to enroll with Mary, his engaged wife, who was with child.

And it came to pass, that when they were there, her days were accomplished that she should be delivered. And she brought forth her first-born child, and wrapped him in swaddling clothes, and laid him in a manger, because there was no room for them at the inn. And there was a darkness over the inn now and sounds of quarreling; and across the lighted windows lunged clumsy figures, shouting.

The warlords were in the inn sumptuously quartered, lolling in fine chairs in their stockinged feet, their muddy boots on the beds. The Dictators were there too. They had taken the whole first floor months ahead and were now bellowing orders to the servants. And they could be heard complaining that their patience was being exhausted. Greed was in the inn, sprawled across a great bed. Covetousness and Cupidity were swaggering about the hall, laughing coarsely. Hatred had taken over a double room and could be heard snarling at Envy and Intolerance, who claimed to have a prior right to the large chamber with double windows.

And in the corridors of the first floor a great bully of a man slashing about with a sword, reviling his companions, and boasting of some book he had written about conquering all mankind and reducing those who did not agree with him to slavery. This man was called Conquest and he was demanding a great front suite where he could have more breathing space. And nowhere within the inn was there Love, Kindliness, Faith, Hope or Charity.

Now there were in the country humble people with no hate in their hearts, keeping the faith, watching over their own and affrighted by the horrors that were about them and by the drone of bombers that passed overhead blotting out the glory of the stars; and they were weary of ultimatums and threats and challenge and counter challenge, and sick of heart at the corruption of mind and spirit.

And behold an Angel of the Lord stood over them, and the brightness of God shone round and said, "Fear not; for behold, I bring you good tidings of great joy that shall be to all people: for this day is born to you a Saviour, who is Christ the Lord, in the city of David, and who is the Prince of Peace, the Deliverer of the afflicted and the Christ of love and tolerance. And this shall be a sign unto you: you shall find the infant wrapped in swaddling clothes, and laid in a manger." And suddenly there was with the Angel a multitude of the heavenly army, praising God and saying, "Glory to God in the highest, and on earth peace, good will toward men."

And they came with haste and found the infant lying in the manger. And the arrogant within the inn were silenced; and the drone of the ships of destruction, sweeping overhead, was no more, neither were there sounds of distant cannonading. To their ears came only the breathing of the cattle and the first cries of the Christ Child. And they understood the words that had been spoken to them.

Unmapped

The Newlyweds had bought a turkey for Christmas day, and as Newlyweds was a novice at carving, his wife insisted on his learning how to carve from the cookery book.

When the turkey appeared on the table, however, the host was plainly at a loss how to begin.

"Why don't you carve it, dear?" asked his wife, anxiously. "You know exactly how it's done."

"Of course I do, love," said Newlywed, "but I can't find the dotted lines!"

The family of 1c Seaman Jerry Bennett received a phone call from him last Sunday from San Francisco, California. He had arrived there just in time to have dinner with the Stokes Nebeker family.

Another caller from California was Pvt. Chas. Burkhardt who is stationed at Ft. Ord. He called home on Saturday the occasion being his nineteenth birthday.

Cpl. Robert Nemeth has returned to N. Camp Hood, Texas after spending an enjoyable 15 day furlough here with his parents and other relatives and friends.

The following are several more letters from our boys who have received their Christmas boxes. This one is from the British Isles:

Dear Ladies:-
I received my Christmas package from you two days ago, and I want to thank you very, very much. Wasn't going to open it until Christmas but with very little coaxing it was opened. The things sure were wrapped well, and it was like unwrapping many packages.

All the articles were everything a soldier could use or desire. There was one article I won't be able to use for awhile though and that is the comb, as I had all my hair cut off and head shaved.

I am located somewhere in the British Isles. The people around here treat the fellows swell.

You ladies aren't the only ones with ration cards, as we too have them. We get 7 packages of cigarettes, 1 bar soap, 2 boxes of matches, 5 ounces of candy and 2 razor blades a week.

In closing I again want to thank everyone responsible for my receiving such a swell package.

Sincerely, Pfc. Robert Frisch
And this one is from Sicily in the form of a Christmas greeting, that may well express the thoughts of all our boys so far from home.

Tho this Christmas finds me far from home
In distant lands
That I must roam
I haven't much to offer
I haven't much to say
But here's wishing, you health and happiness
Upon this Christmas day.
Sgt. Bob Mast.

The following poem was written by Raymond Murray somewhere in Italy:

Beauty of a Rose
The beauty of a rose is to me a welcome sight,
Its the surest way for Nature
To show her Artistic Design
To most of the other people its just another rose
But to me its a way of saying "To you all my beauty goes."
Oh! Beautiful rose of you I'll write
Even when your petals are closed so very tight
The beauty of a rose to me a wonderful sight
My thoughts are of you each and every night.
Let no one disturb this earthly flower
As it grows more lovely with each passing hour.
Pity the person who picks my rose
I'd defend it to the end, the flower I chose.

Why you are asked to

Conserve Electricity

Since there is no shortage of electricity, you may wonder why you are asked to conserve it.

The answer is that there is a need to conserve fuel, railroad facilities, manpower and certain materials used to supply electricity. Conservation of electricity means a saving of these critical resources.

Read the story below and you'll understand where shortages exist and how you can help ease them to promote the war effort and speed the victory we are all striving for.

Coal—is a vital necessity for producing the arms and equipment our men need on the fighting fronts throughout the world. Coal is also a first necessity in producing electricity. By conserving electricity you conserve coal for war production.

Transportation—The nation's transportation system is heavily burdened in moving war supplies and troops. These same transportation facilities must also bring coal to our power plants. By conserving electricity you help ease the strain on transportation.

Manpower—The need for men in the armed forces has created a shortage of manpower. Conservation of electricity in commercial and industrial establishments and in the home, helps to conserve manpower for the producing and transporting of coal.

Critical materials—Every electric light bulb uses tungsten for a filament. Tungsten is also needed in great quantities for radio tubes, Radar and other equipment. By using fewer electric bulbs and using them conservatively, you help our men get more of the weapons they need.

Electricity has gone to war—don't waste it!

PUBLIC SERVICE COMPANY OF NORTHERN ILLINOIS

Here's where you can help
conserve electricity

Indoor and outdoor advertising, promotional and display sign lighting

Decorative and ornamental lighting, including decorative flood lighting

Show window lighting which does not provide essential interior illumination

Marquee and building entrance lighting (other than advertising signs)

Lighting of outdoor business establishments

General interior illumination and show case lighting

Lighting in the home and use of electric appliances

Ask at any of our offices for a free booklet giving the detailed suggestions of the War Production Board as to how the above uses of electricity may be reduced.

LAWYER'S HEAVEN

The average American is inclined to regard the complaints of business men about governmental interference as exaggerated. But the average American would be shocked if he had to manage a business these days. He would quickly discover that American enterprise has become a legalistic paradise.

Hundreds of orders were issued this last week, as usual. There was one on malted grains. WPB revoked order M-288, relating to malted grains and malt syrup because it was superseded by order No. 66 of the food distributing administration.

Then there was one on CMP. whatever that means. The WPB announced simply that use of the quarterly identification symbol in connection with the placement of orders under CMP procedure has been clarified thru the issue of Interpretation 15 of CMP regulation 1.

Miss Jones, call the lawyer.

Tell him to hurry, Miss Jones.

Those are just samples. There were changes in PRC P-98-C; in Order L-257; in Conservation T-1 in MPR 444, and in Ration Order 13; among many other things. Where's that lawyer?—Indianapolis News.

The local meeting is one of many being held by Sinclair agents every where as a contribution toward finding a solution to the farm labor shortage.

The feature of the meeting is to be a motion picture on training farm help. It is based on a special farm application of the Job Instruction Program developed by the Training Within Industry, Section of the War Manpower Commission. That program has been adapted to farming by the American Society of Agricultural Engineers.

In addition to the picture, there will be a full program of entertainment including a selected comedy to appeal to every member of every farm family.

Mr. Cole also promises interesting announcements about his plans for dependable delivery of Sinclair products to his farm customers for the coming crop year.

Pre-Pearl Harbor Fathers

Pre-Pearl Harbor fathers with agricultural experience or background, but not now employed in agricultural work may be classified III-C if they begin farm work before their induction notice is mailed to them, says C. A. Hughes county farm adviser.

State Selective Service headquarters recently made a recommendation that local draft boards permit men with agricultural backgrounds to move to agricultural employment with a sufficient number of war units and defer them because of this type of work.

This new memorandum will help ease the farm labor situation, C. A. Hughes said. Because many fathers with agricultural experience will prefer making their contribution to the nation's war effort by producing food, instead of serving in the armed forces.

In order to meet the increased goals for 1944, more farm labor has to be made available. If our armies are to advance on the fighting fronts, they must receive continuous supplies from the farm front he points out.

Pre-Pearl Harbor fathers now in non-essential industry should contact county farm advisers for information about farmers seeking married farm workers.

LOW DOWN FROM HICKORY

You hear about things about "deader than a door nail". Well, the latest is the 4 freedoms. It was kinda flimsy, right from the start—something like a whispy fog early in the morning, before the sun warmed up. But it sounded kinda pretty, if you listened sorta casual and without pondering too heavy.

But I see they are trying to revive it—give it some new glands or something. It is on our new one-cent postage stamp—as big as life—the 4 Freedoms. A campaign slogan on a postage stamp, where you got to pay one cent for a slogan you don't think is much shakes in the first place, is kinda nery. But you must buy it regardless—unless you quit writing anybody—and go in your hole and hibernate.

When the 4 Freedoms first came out it caught a good many folks kinda off-balance. But without things like freedom to work where you wish to work and not have to dig up, the other 4 Freedoms don't look so hot.

I guess they started using the slogan too soon—too far from election day. It has had time to backfire—and loud, like a balky carburetor.

Yours with the low down swept three games from the once powerful Mokena Oilers to remain in third place while the Paperhangers took three games from the Smokers. Looks like the Oilers will have to bring out their oil cans and oil up their arms as they have lost six games in a row. The Smokers can't stand prosperity as they lost three games after winning five in a row.

by EVERETT MITCHELL
Farm Commentator, Heard Daily 6:15-6:45 am on WMAQ-670 on your dial

DURING recent weeks a number of requests have been received from victory gardeners pertaining to the best possible winter protection of their bramble crop.

Brambles, including raspberries, blackberries and dewberries, suffer each winter from the killing of the canes. Hence, the grower should give them the very best protection. This should reduce the thawing and freezing of the soil, reduce the freezing of the canes and the drying out of the fruit plants.

The best way to protect brambles for the winter is to cover them with straw or soil, and to do this it is advisable that two men work together. In the covering procedure one bends the plants down and holds them while the other covers them with soil. Some growers pin the plants down with a forked stick. This helps hold the plants down even in wet weather when some of the canes might break through the soil.

The canes must be bent carefully to avoid breakage. This can be accomplished after the plants have been pinned down and partially covered by hand, by plowing on each side of the row and throwing the soil over the plants. Care should be used, however, not to plow too deeply, thereby damaging many of the roots.

If straw is to be used to cover the brambles, it should be free of grain as the growing stalks will be a serious weed pest during the following year. Since the straw is so light, it is necessary that the upright canes be pinned down with wires bent in the shape of hairpins or with crocheted sticks.

It takes only four inches of soil to protect the brambles but eight to twelve inches of straw should be applied. Although the brambles demand a great deal of care, their fruits will be well received at the gardener's table next fall.

Make it a thrifty CHRISTMAS—give WAR BONDS. Keep on BACKING THE ATTACK.

CAPT. JOHNNY WHELCHER and Lieut. Comdr. Rip Miller of Navy rate Eddie Prokop of Georgia Tech the best all-around back they've seen in years.

"What can Prokop do?" Captain Whelchel asked. He then proceeded to answer, "Everything. He can pass as well as Angelo Bertelli—he can run with Creighton Miller or anyone else—he is another Bob Odell on defense—and he can kick, Passer, ball carrier, blocker, tackler and kicker—what more can you do with only one pair of feet, one pair of arms, one body and one head?"

"Prokop cannot only do all of these things, but he can do them brilliantly."

"The captain is 100 per cent correct," Miller said. "Prokop is one of the best backs I ever saw. In addition to everything else he also happens to be a great competitor."

A combination of Bertelli, Odell and Miller has to be something extra. Prokop's all-around play against Tulane on Saturday was the star feature of the season, a season crowded with great backs.

"If there is any professional league draft this winter," Captain Whelchel added, "you'll find Prokop the number one choice, with something to spare."

Saving the Game

Switching his subject, Captain Whelchel had this to say:

"You can't pay tribute enough to all those outmanned, overpowered teams that have taken heavy beatings week after week without a chance to win. I mean such teams as Columbia, Princeton, Wisconsin, Missouri, Texas Christian, Southern Methodist, Georgia—these and many others that knew they never had a chance on the winning side. It would have been easy enough to quit and let the game go. If that had happened we wouldn't have had any real football again for eight or ten years."

First 'Shoestring Pass'

"Dear Sir: If you care to look back through 50 years of football, here's an interesting angle. For just 50 years ago Yale and Princeton met on old Manhattan Field in a game that Richard Harding Davis, writing for Harper's Weekly, called 'The greatest sports spectacle New York or America has ever witnessed.' More than 28,000 were there. The date—November 30, 1893. Both teams were unbeaten as yet. The Princeton captain—tight-lipped, grim, shaggy-haired—was Doggy Trenchard, a great end who was Frank Hinkey's end mate on Camp's All-American of that year. Trenchard died just a few weeks ago. His passing left but three of the twenty-two starters in that game still alive—Pete Balliet, the Princeton center; Frank Butterworth, the Yale safety man; and George Adee, also of Yale."

"Intriguing story of the game, though, won by Princeton, 6-0, was that it marked the only time a long gain was made around Hinkey's end. And it saw the first 'shoestring play' ever pulled out of the bag."

"Lea told me the story before his death. 'We'd scored in the first half and were leading, 6-0, in the second. But Yale was dangerous, murderous. On the play in question, King, the quarterback, called for an ordinary off-tackle smash. But Trenchard, the captain, demurred. Doggy was a gambler, and he was captain—and had the last word—in those days. He told King to call the dangerous 'long pass' (nothing more than a modern lateral to a man in motion)."

"Then King pulled the ruse that fooled Hinkey. He went over and started to bowl me out savagely for my failure to carry out my assignment. Hinkey just stood there fascinated. He'd never heard such a tongue-lashing in public. Meanwhile, Frank Morse was crouched over by the sideline tying his shoelace. Trenchard stood back of the center, called the signals quickly, took the ball from Balliet and rifled it out to Morse. The latter went 50 yards down the sideline before Butterworth pulled him down from behind on the five."

"No, we didn't score after that, but we had Yale in a hole from which they could never get out. We kept 'em pinned down there all the rest of the way."

Luckman, Baugh, Hutson

If you happened to own or coach a professional football team and you could pick one of three men—Sid Luckman, Sammy Baugh or Don Hutson, which name would you reach for?

No one can challenge the fact that these three men have been of greater value than any other stars.

Bronko Nagurski was the greatest power back in history. Cliff Battles was the best of all the running backs. But Sid, Sammy and Don have done the most damage.

OTTO GRAHAM, Northwestern's brilliant halfback, who bowed out of collegiate competition when the Wildcats defeated Illinois in their final game of the season, has left behind a list of gridiron accomplishments destined to keep his name in the record books for some time to come.

As a final accolade to a noteworthy career, his teammates named him the most valuable player on the 1943 squad.

The all-around athlete from Waukegan, Ill., broke all existing Big Ten forward passing records during his three years of play with Northwestern. He also tied the conference single game scoring mark.

In almost every poll conducted during the season, Northwestern ranked among the 10 top teams of the nation. Without Graham, the Wildcats wouldn't have had a chance. He sparked the team all during its eight-game schedule.

Graham's Record

Outstanding among his gridiron achievements were:

1. Established a new Big Ten forward passing record by completing 157 passes out of 321 for 2,162 yards, a completion average of .489.
2. Set a new Big Ten forward passing record for one year by completing 89 passes out of 182 for 1,092 yards in 1942.
3. Tied the Big Ten scoring record of four touchdowns in one game against Wisconsin in 1943.
4. Set a new Big Ten single game forward passing record by completing 20 out of 29 passes for 295 yards against Michigan in 1942.

Here is his three-year passing record:

Year	Games	Passes	Comp.	Yds.
1941	8	75	36	579
1942	9	182	89	1,092
1943	8	64	32	491

Although Graham reached stardom in his first college game against Kansas State in 1941 by returning a punt 95 yards for a touchdown and completing five out of nine passes for another 95 yards, it was in 1943 that he attained full stature as a football player. In his last year of competition Graham proved that he is everything a triple-threat player should be. He completed 32 out of 64 passes for 491 yards and carried the ball 87 times for a total of 355 yards, an average of four yards per carry. It was the best ball carrying performance of his three years of competition.

Kicking Assignment

He took over the kicking assignment when the Wildcats lost the services of Herman Frickey and Don Buffmire in midseason and averaged 33 yards per kick. He also proved to be an extremely successful kicker of points after touchdown, sending seven out of nine attempts through the uprights.

A glance at Northwestern's scoring column provides further testimony of Graham's value to the Wildcat cause. He scored 61 points on nine touchdowns to place second in conference scoring. In addition he threw four touchdown passes. He thus had a hand in scoring 85 out of the 189 points rung up by the Wildcats this fall.

Graham hit his scoring peak in the Wisconsin game when in 24 minutes he equaled the conference scoring record of four touchdowns in one game. He also kicked three points after touchdown and passed for still another touchdown. He delivered against Ohio State when the Wildcat offense was floundering badly. During a brief appearance against the Buckeyes he scored one touchdown and passed for another in a 13 to 0 triumph.

Graham is one of the finest athletes ever to compete in Big Ten circles. And that takes in a lot of territory.

SPORTS SHORTS

❑ The Chicago Cubs have eight players with 4-F draft classifications.

❑ The first field goal John Sturgis ever attempted enabled Ohio State to beat Illinois 29 to 26.

❑ The St. Louis Cardinals have hit only one home run in their own park in four World Series. In the same four series the Yankees hit 12 in St. Louis.

Factory-Made Coops Aid Chicken Raisers

Trimly Designed Houses Come in Various Sizes

Householders, moved by the red meat shortage, are being converted by the thousands into backyard chicken fanciers. The chicken "population" increase this year over last—in rural areas alone—is about 132 million head. At an all time high, the present chicken population of the country is above 500 million. No census is taken on urban raised chickens, where the rate of increase is greatest.

Interest in chicken raising, dealers say, is now spurred by the introduction and display of small ready-made houses in retail stores. As these become easily procurable in complete units or prefabricated for quick assembly, it is thought interest will zoom higher. The designs now being shown range from two-story compact types, about the size of a piano box, to large roomy ones big enough to double as hunters' cabins.

Because of the labor shortage and limitations affecting many kinds of building material, the public is finding the ready-made chicken house most easily obtainable. The commercial fabricator on the other hand may use various kinds of substitute material advantageously, or remnants and knotty pieces of lumber.

One of the smaller chicken houses exhibited in the Merchandise Mart, Chicago, was designed to accommodate nine laying hens, or 50 small chicks, and is approximately 6 feet by 3 feet and 4 feet high. The ground floor is a scratching area and is connected by a ramp to the sun deck which is equipped with three "departmentalized" nests, removable roosts, and has compartments for charcoal, grit, water and mash. The second story front is of glass, while the slanting top is built of sliding slat panels of wood. Above this is a second top which may be lifted to admit sunlight. By the lowering of this top-lid and the raising of the ramp, drafts and cold are excluded.

The larger house is 8 by 12 feet, overall height 7 feet 1 inch; in front 6 feet 7 inches, in rear 56 inches. Of the prefabricated type, it comes in eight sections. Main door is 6 feet high by 22 inches and is fitted with hinges and hasp for lock. Equipped with hardwood floors, ventilators and sliding door for chicken outlet, the house has triple windows, 4 lights each, 9 inches by 12 in size. Side walls are made of ½-inch Nu-wood, insulated sheeting, coated with asphalt inside and out. The roof is made of ½-inch Gypsum board sheeting covered with 55-pound rolled roofing.

Small Farm Engines

Get Preference Rating

Farm rationing committees of county war boards again have authority to assign preference ratings for delivery of small engines needed in essential food production.

This will apply to about 37,000 air and liquid-cooled internal combustion engines of 20 horsepower and under which will be manufactured during the current year. No state or county quotas will be established for the distribution of these engines, since the production is estimated to be sufficient to meet all essential needs.

The only distribution control will be at the county level, where county farm rationing committees will issue preference rating certificates to farmers or operators of farm machinery for hire. The certificates will bear a preference rating of AA-2, the highest which can be given a civilian product.

Good Poultry Houses

Experience has shown that the essentials of a good poultry house are a dry floor that can be easily cleaned, walls that give protection from wind and excessive cold, enough light, provision for ventilation, and, of course, a firm foundation and a tight roof. As about three-fourths of the heat lost by conduction from a poultry house is lost through the roof, the ceiling is the first part of the house that should be insulated.

Pattern No. 8465 is in sizes 9, 11, 13, 15, 17 and 19. Size 11 takes 3½ yards 3½-inch material. 9 yards braid or ric-rac.

Army-Navy 'E' Awards Of Six Months' Duration

After a manufacturing plant has held an Army-Navy "E" pennant for six months, the company's record is reviewed by a government awards board, says Collier's. If the plant has equaled or exceeded its previous six-months performance, a service star is added to the flag; if it has not maintained both quality and quantity through the fault of either the management or the employees, the flag is withdrawn and has to be earned over again.

When you see news photos of soldiers "off duty" in camp or behind the battle-lines—notice how often you'll see them smoking a cigarette. There's a good reason for that. Army officials say that cigarettes are an appreciable factor in maintaining morale—and the soldiers themselves add that a carton of cigarettes from home is always welcome. What brand? Well, sales records in Post Exchanges and Canteens show that Camels are the favorite cigarette with men in all the services. Though there are Post Office restrictions on packages to overseas Army men, you can still send Camels to soldiers in the U. S., and to Sailors, Marines, and Coast Guardsmen wherever they are.—Adv.

SNAPPY FACTS ABOUT RUBBER

Military requirements take the major portion of available rubber supplies for tires (for planes, trucks, and other war vehicles), treads for tanks, boots, balloons, raincoats, ponchos, shoes, surgical supplies, and hundreds of other essential military items. That's why patriotic civilians take the restrictions on their rubber use in an understanding spirit.

According to the court historian to Philip II, and recorded in 1615, Columbus was credited with having found natives bounding rubber play balls (1490-1500) and to have brought some back from Hispaniola to Queen Isabella.

DO YOU know the Kaleidoscope quilt pattern? A block is shown here. It is put together so that from every angle it makes a different design. One of these fascinating quilts made in two tones of blue and white started all the sewing and sawing for the attractive bed nook you see in the sketch. The bed and woodwork are painted white. The built-in closets and book shelves at each side of the bed are connected with a scalloped cornice of thin wood. Widths of blue gingham are stitched together for the full curtain at the head of the bed and for the under spread.

NOTE--Mrs. Spears has prepared a pattern for the Kaleidoscope quilt (No. 200) and for the cornice scallops (No. 207) to be cut with a key hole or jig saw. Patterns are 15 cents each and may be ordered direct from:

Ralph Tilsy Sends Interesting Program From N. Africa

North Africa

Dear Mr. and Mrs. Semmler:

Just a short letter to let you know that I receive and appreciate the Orland Park Herald. A Sgt. here says that the "Winston Salem Journal" is the greatest paper that is, but I am forced to disagree. It sure helps to make one feel closer to home. It was dry and hot here from May to Oct. but now it rains frequently and gets very chilly at night. I am kept busy during the day repairing aeroplanes and aeroplane parts.

Merry Christmas and Happy New Year.

Men: And the crooked shall be made straight and the rough places a plain:

All: And the Glory of the Lord shall be revealed and all flesh shall see it together: for the mouth of the Lord hath spoken.

Invocation in Unison: O Lamb of God, who takest away the sin of the world, fill our hearts with such love for Thee that, abhorring that which is evil and cleaving to that which is good, we may best serve our brother-men and glorify Thy Holy Name. The Lord's Prayer. Doxology.
